“ I remember Joy Baker when I had her as my teacher at Jefferson Junior High in Eugene, Oregon. I enjoyed her classes enough to schedule her classes multiple times in my almost two years at the school. She was the first of a string of English teachers that I appreciated in Jr. High School, High School and College. It was never my major but English teachers always kept me interested in their subject matter. My condolences to her son, Scott, and any other family she may have had.

I'm now 63, but I still remember Mrs. Baker as one of the best teachers I ever had. She was strict and no-nonsense, but she had a heart of gold! When I worked in Hollywood and sold my first professional TV story to Star Trek: The Next Generation, it was my honor to have her attend a local screening of my episode in Eugene, Oregon. She made a huge impact on my life. I now live in France and I'm trying to learn French (c'est tres difficile). I just wish I could remember the differenc between a dangling participle and a split infinitive!
