“ Larry lived just a few houses up the hill and we spent lots of time together as kids. We hunted, fished and played sports together by the hour. When we started driving our 'fast' cars, the mischief multiplied but we somehow lived through it all. He always had that grin like we had just pulled something off and had gotten away with it. Over the years I would see him at his shop or maybe the Elks at a class reunion and we would start up right where we left off, as old friends. Now you can rest Larry.....”
